Heather's Story

A single moment forever changed Heather Griego's life. When she was 22 years old, a horse fell on Heather and paralyzed her from the torso down. She spent 4 months in the hospital and began to transition into a new life with paralysis.

Despite a grim prognosis from her medical team, Heather refused to give up. "I took it upon myself to keep exercising. After years of swimming, yoga, acupuncture, and weightlifting, I saw real changes take place in my body."

Heather went from being able to lift 1 pound to lifting 20-plus pounds.

22 years after the injury that changed her life, Heather remains just as dedicated to her recovery as she was on Day 1—and her community has echoed that dedication.

Through a fundraising campaign with the trusted nonprofit Help Hope Live, over $40,000 has been raised in Heather's honor. That includes $1,200 raised from the last Gnarly's magic fundraiser event last month.

Fundraising is a key component of life with paralysis, as insurance does not cover what someone like Heather needs to heal, live, and thrive after injury.

Today, Heather has her sights set on a game-changing piece of equipment: a MyoCycle, which allows individuals like Heather to use electrical stimulation paired with exercise to continually strengthen mobility and independence from home.

Regular exercise with a MyoCycle will significantly impact Heather's life, but despite the proven therapeutic benefits, the cost is not covered by insurance.

"I have worked so hard to regain my strength," explained Heather. "I hope everyone can recognize my determination to walk and continue to aid in my recovery."
